The Doom of London.

The question, "What will be the doom of London?" seems a not unreasonable one. What will be the end of the great city? What will bring about the ruin over which Macaulay's New Zealanders is to cast his moralizing eye? Several answers may be given. The destruction of London at the hands of a victorious invader is possible, but extremely improbable. London may be besieged, even bombarded; she cannot be destroyed.

Flood? This again may be dismissed as most improbable, and one calamity only remains to be considered, namely—fire.

Now London has suffered more than once terribly from this cause, and in 1666 the city was practically wiped out. Every one knows this. But it is not every one who knows that the great conflagration was predicted fifteen years before by Lilly, the astrologer, and by another astrologer, Nostradamus, a century before that. Nostradamus cast his prediction in a French quatrain, the gist of which was that in 1666 London would be visited by a conflagration which would destroy St. Paul's and eighty-nine other churches.—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

In the Wrong Place.

A characteristic story of General Scott is told in connection with the sword presented to him by the state of Louisiana, through the legislature, at the close of the Mexican war. He was accosted one day by a man who said: "General Scott, I had the honor of doing most of the work on the sword presented to you by the state of Louisiana. I should like to ask if it was just as you would have chosen."

"It's a very fine sword, sir, a very fine sword indeed," said the general. "I am proud to have it. There is only one thing I should have preferred different. The inscription should have been on the blade, sir. The scabbard may be taken from us, but the sword, never!"

Most of Them Paid.

A large company of easily gulled individuals was victimized a short time back in an English town. By means of posters announcing a grand sacred concert and by a free distribution of complimentary tickets bearing on their face this condition, "No gentleman admitted unless accompanied by a lady," a large audience was gathered at the theater. When the crowd began to press in, the ticket taker began shouting:

"All having complimentary tickets will please pass upstairs to the gallery."

This was a dark, dreary, hot place, not having the capacity for seating comfortably more than 100 people. Those who pressed forward with their tickets were told that if they did not wish to go to the gallery they could be admitted by paying a shilling apiece. Every man who appeared with a complimentary ticket of course had a lady with him and felt a sort of embarrassment if she were not his wife or intimate acquaintance, so he yielded to compulsion and paid rather than retire, and so the scheme succeeded to the extent of filling the house.—London Answers.

Gale Versus Storm.

In a battle between a storm and a gale which would you bet on? This is not such a hard problem as it looks. The voters of the second assembly district, Queens county, decided it some years ago, and demonstrated that a gale will defeat a storm three out of four times.

The first clash of the elements occurred in 1896, when Frederick Storm, Republican, beat Cyrus Gale, Democrat. Both rested the following year, but Gale returned to the fray and scored straight victories in 1898, 1899 and 1900. Storm, however, partially evened the account by serving a term in congress. He was defeated for reelection by Townsend Scudder, whose last name, by the way, brings up thoughts of "scudding before the storm," and gave "bunch betters" an indication as to how they should place their money.—New York American.

MURDER IS INCREASING

American Homicide Record Discussed by Writer in London Mail.

PER CENTAGE OF HOMICIDES TO POPULATION IS 25 TIMES AS GREAT AS IN GERMANY, 14 TIMES AS GREAT AS ENGLAND AND WALES—IN EUROPE, ITALY ALONE HAS A WORSE RECORD AND ONLY MEXICO SURPASSES US ON THIS HEMISPHERE.

Law notes for July reprints an article which appeared in the London Mail under the signature, "Anglo-American," bearing on the appalling increase of homicide in this country. While the article may have been intended as an argument for capital punishment as a deterrent of crime, it rather shows that there has been a complete breaking down of the law against homicide in this country, and it is founded on capital punishment. The writer for instance, says that the disagreement of the jury in the Thaw case made very little difference.

"It would have made very little difference if Thaw had been convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to be electrocuted," he adds. "There is as wide a gulf between passing a verdict in the Criminal Courts of America and carrying it out as there is between passing a law against it enforced. I venture to say with all possible abruptness that the machinery does not exist in the United States for making a murderer of Thaw's wealth and social influence pay the penalty for his crime."

A Striking Instance. "In the twelve years that I have known America at all intimately I only recollect one instance in which the criminal law worked with anything approaching the English standard of swiftness and precision. That was in the case of the man who shot President McKinley."

"Public opinion insisted on a speedy trial and a speedy execution, and public opinion had its way. Had the man of law been allowed to influence the odds would have been over seventy to one against his assassin ever being brought to the chair."

"The odds I have quoted are not to be taken as a mere figure of speech. They are a hard and appalling fact. Since 1896 there have been 131,951 murders and homicides in the United States and but 2,286 executions. In 1886 the number of murders was 1,808; in 1904 it had risen to 4,428; in 1865 the number of executions was 103; in 1904, 116."

"There was nothing that I am aware of to make 1904 a year of peculiar criminality. Indeed, the figures of 1905 tell an even more sinister tale—Americans seem now to be killing one another at the rate of more than 9,000 a year. Looking over the statistics of the last twenty years one finds, roughly speaking, that while executions have remained virtually stationary, murders and homicides have multiplied five fold."

Appalling Figures. "There are over five times as many murders committed in the United States per million inhabitants as in Australia, more than fourteen times as many as in England and Wales, eight times as many as in Canada and about twenty-five times as many as in Germany."

"Only one European country, Italy, has ever shown in this respect a worse record; only one country in the world to-day, Mexico, exceeds the American average; and the United States has the further distinction of being the only country where the proportion of murders to population is positively on the increase."

"These are facts as undeniable as they are portentous. The immigrant and the negro, help, of course, to swell the figures, but the darkies altogether, and the white native-born Americans will be responsible for more than three times as many murders in proportion to their numbers as stand to the discredit of any other civilized nation, except Spain and Italy."

"What is the explanation of so disturbing a phenomenon? Is it nothing more than the lawlessness of a raw, vigorous and untrammelled community, but barely emerging from the backwoods stage of growth? Or is it the reflex action on matters of social conduct of that excessive individualism that 'state-blindness,' as H. G. Wells has happily called it, the pervasive lack of a civic and social conscience, which have already wrought such confusion and degradation in the body politic?"

Too Much Technicalities. "The criminal procedure of America to-day is very much as our ways in the time of the Stuarts. It is hopelessly entangled in technicalities and neglects justice and common sense to chase after an impossible infallibility of form."

"In a criminal case, as is conducted across the Atlantic, it is not the prisoner in the dock, but the judge on the bench who is really on trial. The counsel on both sides polish up a thousand little points of pleading and practice and evidence, and are them off at the judge, who has to decide on a single error, no matter how trivial or how far removed from the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, the Appellate Court will order a new trial of the case almost automatically. "That is the grand distinction between the American procedure and our own. In the English courts all such errors of form are brushed aside, unless they can be shown to have caused a miscarriage of justice. In the American courts any error, however technical and however little related to the fundamental issue is held to presume prejudice."
